Humble Beginnings – From a Turkey Fryer to the Tap

Necessity is the mother of all invention, right? Unable to import some of their favorite ales due to Wyoming state law, Adam Chenault and Colby Cox found an answer to their perplexing problem in a turkey fryer. After many batches of recipe roulette and ensuing failures followed by triumph, fate, otherwise known as a mutual friend, introduced the two of them and a brewmance was born. As their passion for the process grew stronger, the turkey fryer was soon traded-in for a half barrel homebrewing system. Batch after batch they explored and experimented with new hops and malts and refined their recipes to the liking of their friends' and families' palates. After years of backyard brewing and strenuous pint glass research, bigger ideas began to boil up between the two. The once joked about dream of opening up a brewpub soon became the focus of their attention. Knowing little about the restaurant industry, they began to seek the advice of their friends, often over a few beers of course. Friend, long-time local, and behind-the-scenes operator of the Q Roadhouse, Gavin Fine took a liking to the idea. Gavin was passionate about the restaurant and offering his guests a fun mix of eclectic food that provided a dining experience unlike any other in the valley. Colby and Adam had the same fervor for the beer. It was a perfect match, and thus a partnership was formed and The Roadhouse Restaurant & Brewery was born.

Motivation – Beer to the People

It's all about the journey, not the destination. That journey brought most of us here to Jackson, Wyoming where our thirst for adventure seems to grow exponentially. At the Roadhouse Brewing Co. we feel the same way about our beer. The many masterful recipes and brews that have been discovered have inspired us to explore the world of beer to its boundaries. We strive to cultivate and enhance that journey and grow the local craft beer experience in Jackson Hole & our neighboring communities. We want to brew like we home brew and bring great beer to great people.
