

Always Going Back: Jackson Hole, Wyoming

January 4, 2019 / Travel / 2 Comments

A couple of weeks ago, Eric and I and a few friends headed back to one of our favorite spots on the planet: Jackson Hole, Wyoming. Eric had been to this magical place before, but I first experienced it with him and a couple of friends last December. We had so much fun that we decided to make it an annual thing, head there every December with whatever friends wanted to go. Buuut, then we couldn't wait that long and decided to check out Jackson in the summertime too. Both seasons were amazing, both worth seeing.

Lunch or afternoon snacks at Bin 22 – This favorite little wine market is only about a block or two from The White Buffalo Club, so obviously we found ourselves back at the Bin...several times. Grab a bottle of wine for the road, or sit down and stay a while with meats, cheeses, and small plates. Eric fell in love with the oxtail soup here this trip, made everyone go back the next day to try it, and has been raving about it ever since. I can't really speak on the oxtail soup (I didn't try it, sorry!), but I was super jazzed on the housemade meatball.