The mountain town may be laid-back, but the culinary scene—one with the world ordering its celebrated Snake River Farms beef—is anything but sleepy and rivals big-city dining with big points for creativity and flavor. Start at Glorietta Trattoria for inventive Italian fare like house-made pastas and a shareable American Wagyu Zabuton, which is something to write home about. At Bin 22, tucked behind a wine shop, you'll find Spanish-inspired tapas—octopus, patatas bravas, and more Basque region-inspired cuisine—plus the option to grab any bottle off the shelf with zero corkage fee. If you're craving something family-friendly, head to Hand Fire Pizza, housed in a converted theater known for its wood-fired pies. For a taste of French bistro charm, book a table at The Bistro, the latest concept from Jackson Hole Fine Dining, where bar steak, meatloaf, herb-roasted chicken, and a fresh oyster bar pair beautifully with wines from around the globe—all in a setting that feels sophisticated but, in true Jackson Hole fashion, never stuffy.
