Jackson, Wyoming, got its first snow in mid-September last year—which made leaf-peeping all the more spectacular. Typically, though, powderhounds don't crowd Jackson until November. Translation: Now that the summer travelers are gone, you can have this remote, charming Rocky Mountain town mostly to yourself.

Drink Up: Spend happy hour at Bin22, a wine bar, bottle shop, and specialty market that hums with after-work crowds clinking wine glasses and noshing on items from the tapas menu.
