Hilah Almog can thank her sister for introducing her to Benjamin Stahl at a Mika concert in 2012. They met and hit it off that night—but just as friends until they started dating in 2014. In April of 2017, on what Hilah thought was just a normal Saturday morning, Ben popped the question. “He’d added another page to the scrapbook I made him for his 30th birthday,” she recalls. “We celebrated by wandering Central Park, just the two of us, to soak it all in. And then he surprised me with an engagement party with both of our families!”

Though the couple fell in love in New York and now call Berlin home, they returned to Hilah’s family’s ranch in Jackson Hole for their wedding on July 7, 2018. “I was raised on Antelope Trails Ranch, and Ben has spent so much time with us there,” she says. “It’s really a second home and it was so special to get married there.” (Bonus: The family’s ranch is available for wedding rentals!)

Ben and Hilah admittedly have a “funky, bold style” and wanted to infuse that into their mountain setting. “We were inspired by the patterns of Pendleton blankets and the stunning natural surroundings,” she explains. They turned to Jackson native Lindsey Nickel of Lovely Day Events to execute all the details—and they’re glad they did. “We really had to build the venue from scratch, and having Lindsey’s help was invaluable,” admits the bride. Ultimately, they used a bold palette of jewel tones to create drama beneath their dinner tent and worked to incorporate personal details into every moment.

Cocktail hour was held in various lounge areas, including around the family’s teepee and by a vintage Airstream set up with a fire pit. Passed hors d’oeuvres featured the couple’s favorite bites, from arepas and crab cakes to agnolotti on a spoon. “The biggest hit was the cold brew shots, served in shot glasses!” says the bride.
